Dear Jim, In connection with what a Perry Mason might call The Case of the Man of the Cloth I have been considering a number of possibilities, including motives and principles. If one were to presume the possibility of a real subtle caper, then one would also have to consider among these possibilities and alphabetical motivation, like FOI. If I do not believe it is probable, I would consider it can't be discareded entirely at this juncture. And, of cour others have occured to me, ranging upward from the intention of having an influence on a pending election. HW 4/4/74
